Removing the Monkey Wrench: Tips to Meet FDA Retail Program Standards

Learn how retail food regulatory programs can use the Retail Program Standards to enhance uniformity and quality of their inspection program while improving the level of service to their stakeholders. Attendees will have the opportunity to learn from their peers, ask questions, and receive takeaway materials about The FDA Retail Program Standards are designed to help agencies enhance uniformity and quality of inspection programs while improving the level of service to their stakeholders. Get guidance on how to present the standards to and obtain support from upper level management. Find out how to engage staff in assessments, create strategic action plans, and integrate the plans into daily operations. Leave with a clear path forward and support and best practices from colleagues already making headway in the Standards.

Are We Ready? The Viewpoints of Local Health Departments on Climate Change

The National Association of County and City Health Officials (NACCHO) and the George Mason University Center for Climate Change Communication conducted a study to gain a greater understanding of public health preparedness for climate change at the local level. This presentation highlights the viewpoints and programmatic work of local health departments on climate change, and provides a pathway to build awareness and advocate for policies, plans, and programs to support climate change mitigation, and adaptation at the local level.
